

Kamloops resident Shannon Joly was recognized with the B.C. Human Resources Management Association's 2006 Rising Star Award. The award goes to a B.C. HRMA member who is "lighting the HR community on fire."

"By this we mean one person who has been involved in an HR function or community for less than five years and who currently demonstrates great promise as a future leader and great contributor to the B.C. HR community," said a press release from the organization.

Joly is a human resources adviser and generalist at Thompson Rivers University. BC HRMA magazine said when her department restructured to become a client-focused service provider, Joly played a key role in cross-training. She helped develop a region-specific HR mentoring program, unique in B.C. She is currently on maternity leave with her own "little rising star."

Joly was among 19 members nominated for the award.
